Protect Poultry From Pesticides

Feed and Drug administration officials report that poultry and eggs can become contaminated with pesticides. J. A. Smith, County Agent reported.

Pesticides can be picked up by birds through feed, air or the skin. Chlorinated hydrocarbons in particular should not be used around poultry farms because of residue dangers.

The following pesticides should not be used in or around poultry houses: DDT, Lindane, TDE, Toxaphene, Perthane, Dieldrin, or Benzine hexachloride.

Pesticides that can be used safely are: Sevin, Malathion or Co-Ral.

Mrs. James C. Rea, Jr. presented the Plan of Action for the coming year and the budget of $32,60.00 which were adopted by the Board.

Airplane Trip To Holland

Mrs. Jinny Droog Coleman, of Sioux Spring, left New York Wednesday enroute to her native Holland, her first trip since she came to America with her parents when she was 14 months old.

Mrs. Coleman, wife of Herman Coleman, a retired mechanic, has spent the last several days in excited preparations for the trip via Icelandic Airlines. Her daughter, Evelyn Coleman Garrett, also of Sioux Spring, says that many friends have asked Mrs. Coleman to "shop" for them in the Netherlands. Wooden shoes are on the "bring me" list for the Garrett's small daughter and Mrs. Coleman's granddaughter, Martha, not quite two years old. There will be gifts for the other grandchildren, too, Wanda, 9, and Johanna, 5, daughters of the Warren Coleman.

Mrs. Coleman had a visit last year from cousins living in the Netherlands, and she has corresponded with other relatives overseas over the years. Since she can speak Dutch she should have quite a home in the country she left many years ago, says Mrs. Garrett.

Tetanus Causes Two Va. Deaths

Dr. Francis Clements, Health Director, said Tuesday that two cases of tetanus have been reported in Virginia thus far this year. A 46-year-old carpenter this week prior to the onset of symptoms, stuck a nail superficially in his hand. The wound was not treated and apparently healed. He was seen in the hospital emergency room with "stiffness of neck, locked jaws, the head was drawn back and the abdomen was rigid. He was admitted to the hospital and tetanus antitoxin was given. He expired the following day.

A 46-year-old woman presented with the swallowing and muscle stiffness were noted. She did not respond to therapy including lethal antitoxin, and expired the day after the splinter had been removed.

During 1963 seven cases of tetanus were reported in Virginia. The ages were from 2 years, 11 years, 50 years, 51 years, 83 years, and 90 years. Five deaths resulted. The 6-day-old baby was born at home of an unimmunized mother, presented with an umbilical infection and clinical tetanus, died shortly after hospital admission. In the six other cases, wounds were of such a minor nature that medical attention was not sought. It is unlikely that tetanus would have resulted in any of these if tetanus toxoid immunization had been a past experience.

The Right To Work

Lesson for May 3, 1964

Every writer knows that what he writes may never be read. Between the time these lines are being written, and are printed in May, it is quite possible that nuclear war lasting an hour or so only, will have wiped most of the people off this earth. To prevent such a war is of course mankind's present major problem. But even supposing — as we must, otherwise all writing would come to a stop — that May will come as usual, and even supposing that no war of any kind comes any more, will that be the end of our problems? Of course not. Overshadowed by the terror of the Bomb, older than that and no less real for not being played up by the newspapers, are many other problems calling urgently for attention. One of these is a problem of work.

"Work With Your Hands"

In the waters along the reefs and in the open sea around a small island there were lobsters and many kinds of fish. Every man on that island was a fisherman, and all of them prospered. Commercial fishing is hard work but these men were not afraid of it. So winter and summer they were out there, never more than an inch or so from death, but earning cheerfully a good living for their families. Now there was one exception, a man who did not go out fishing unless the weather was just right to suit him, a poor fisherman who made his situation worse by spending much of the little income he had on drink. His neighbors did not sympathize with him. They saw it every day: hard work is rewarded, laziness brings poverty. This was in the depression, and the men of that island could not see any point in the then new schemes for helping the unemployed. They figured that being unemployed was a man's own fault and helping him would just encourage him to be lazier still.

A New Problem

The world has changed. We face a different problem today. It used to be the question: How do you get a lazy man to do his share of the community's work? Now the question often is: How can you provide jobs enough so that every man will have the chance to work? A wealthy man was telling with some pride about two wonderful machines which his coal-mining company had recently put into operation. Standing in a quiet air-conditioned room, two highly trained radar men could guide machines, deep in the earth, in digging out the coal. Those two men with their electronically operated machines could turn out more coal than 70 men could before those machines were installed. Four men out of 28 miners were kept on the payroll; twenty-four were fired.

What Can We Do?

There is no serious problem of unemployment in a fisherman's island. There is a serious problem of unemployment in America with its machine civilization. The Bible teachings about work can be obeyed in one situation, they cannot in the other. This is a problem to which the churches have paid very little attention, partly because they don't know what to say about it, partly because many churches are made up largely from management circles rather than of working men. (How many unemployed persons are in your congregation?) This writer does not know the answer. But at least it is time to suggest that from a Christian standpoint, there is something radically wrong with a state of things such that able and willing workers are denied the right to work, many of them for the rest of their lives. The next time you eat a meal, give a thought to those who can never earn a meal of their own.

FAMILY LIFE WEEK

Since Family Life emphasis is soon to be given national prominence, let me turn counsellor to offer some suggestions in marriage and family life.

There are more than 2500 marriage counsellors in the United States today, and they are from almost every field of the professions had services people.

Yet the mills of fate are turning out divorces at the rate of one out of every three marriages. In some localities the divorce rate is equal to marriage. God, in Genesis 2: 24 says, "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh. The Apostle Paul in I Cor. 7:2 states . . . 'let every man have his own wife, and let every wife have her own husband'".

Certainly the context of these passages and the words themselves reveal that God's arrangement is one man for one woman at a time. And it teaches also that they are to be for each other in their covenant relationship with God. Some suggestions are being made here based upon God's arrangement, and in the light of the findings of interviews, case histories, professional report studies made by those who are experts in the field of marriage and family life.

There must always be communication between husband and wife. No matter what the problems are "keep talking" with each other. Too often we hear the expression "I just don't hav anyone to talk with."

Husband keep talking with your wife, and wife keep talking with your husband. Keep those lines of communication open at all cost. You may need separately or together to talk with your minister of some counsellor, but keep talking. That is important.

Then, there must be spiritual and emotional growth. Here is where the spiritual and character qualities are important. To act an adult one must be an adult. This means emotionally as well as physically. Paul says, "the husband must (learn) have his wife, and likewise, the wife her husband. And Genesis affirms they are to be as one flesh We must remember that in such a close tie, integrity and respect for personality must play an important role. The wife and husband must learn to live for each other, and for God. This is a simple formula, but will work; for it will mature them emotionally. When one realizes that God has a purpose in marriage, just as he has purpose in all other areas of life, then one learn to live more unselfishly The blending of love into unselfishness is a wonderful antidote to disturbed marriages. And, you must be your sex. Strange as it may seem God's arrangement is still the best. He made them male and female. This fulfills loneliness in each sex. And in marriage man and woman complement each other.

The "masculanized" female is not so much a wife as a business partner, and the protectorate husband fill only this role, and looses his masculinity. True, woman is to be protected, and man is to be loved, but each must be done in the framework of sex.

Someone has said that "all the sparks of the male-female chase is gone." Man and woman no longer persue each other in subtlety, dignity and with respect for the laws of creation as man and woman.

When someone asked Arthur Miller about his wife he replied, "the scene of a woman is being female; for the man it is to be male."

Within the framework of marriage as a covenant between man and woman, in the larger covenant that both are in covenant with God as one, the marriage can find happiness. The resources through communication, emotional and spiritual growth and the Christian view of sex, can and will give new dimensions to Marriage and Family life. Next week I will give three more factors in Marriage and family life. Be sure to be in the church of your choice as this emphasis surely will be given by your minister on Family week.
